

The House

Constructed by Martin F. Hanley in 1855, the Hanley House Museum is the oldest surviving structure in the City of Clayton and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The home, built in the Greek revival style, is common of southern farmsteads of the early 19th century, but only one visit to the museum will illustrate that its inhabitants were far from ordinary.

Possessing many of the Hanley family's original furniture and artifacts, the home is a window to the past - Illuminating the many lives that once lived within its walls. Through its objects, the museum tells a story depicting the reality of rural life in St. Louis County during antebellum and post-Civil War years.

Once 100.6 acres of picturesque farmland the Hanley farm is now just about 1 acre of parkland on which still stands the Hanley farmstead and detached kitchen which served as the slave quarters. When standing on the back porch of the house the words of Clem Yore, grandson to Martin and Cyrene Hanley, come to mind. In a letter to his Aunt, Clem wrote:

"Where at night I hear whippoorwills and katydids...I think of the back porch and the luxurious Missouri sky before and under which I spent the most happy moments of my life."

From a letter to Nancy Caroline "Aunt Cal" Hanley from Clem Yore, dated May 2, 1894. Historic Hanley House Collection.

Martin Franklin & Cyrene Hanley

Martin Franklin Hanley migrated to St. Louis from Virginia in 1834. Hanley, a blacksmith, was the proprietor of his own forge, tavern and market on land that is today located in University City. He found success in manufacturing plows and other farm implements.

M.F. Hanley married Cyrene Clemens Walton in 1839. Cyrene was born in St. Louis County at her family's estate of Waltondale located in Overland. The marriage of M. F. Hanley and Cyrene produced 11 children - 10 of which lived long lives.

Once the family moved into the homestead situated just east of Hanley's recently constructed road, which bears his name, M. F. Hanley turned his attention away from blacksmithing and focused primarily on farming.

Hanley family members gathered together on the Hanley Farm in 1904

Hanley's young sons helped him stack hay in the fields that lay next to Ralph Clayton's estate. James Hanley, the youngest of the Hanley sons, would recall later in life how at harvest time he "hustled through the hay regardless of bumblebees and hornets."

In 1877, M. F. and Cyrene Hanley joined Ralph Clayton in donating 104 acres of land to make Clayton the County seat.
